

At the 'Peek' of Edwardian country living

WHEN HIS architect asked Sir James Miller in 1901 how much money to spend on the house he was having built in the Scottish Borders, Sir James apparently replied: "It doesn't matter." The silver-plated main staircase at Manderston is a great example of Sir James' casual attitude to spending money.

Not surprisingly, the staircase is the most famous feature of the house, and the one that best sums up the pure extravagance of the Edwardian era.

So how do present day owners Lord and Lady Palmer keep the silver staircase looking so bright and free of tarnish?

The key is the polish. Peek cleans, polishes and protects, all in one. Its antioxidant cleaning properties means that scuff marks and any tarnish are easily removed from the staircase.

Peek is just as impressive on non metal surfaces like marble, or stove enamelled hobs – it will even clean salt water corrosion and protect against the elements on marine vessels.
